Ghost Keygen.Corticotropin-releasing hormone neurons of the median eminence and adjacent periventricular nucleus contain a low molecular weight neuropeptide: a mass spectrometric and immunocytochemical study. The median eminence and adjacent periventricular nucleus contain CRH cells that also express the neuropeptides arginine vasopressin and oxytocin. To determine whether these CRH cells also contain a peptide other than arginine vasopressin or oxytocin, we used a combination of mass spectrometry and immunocytochemistry to identify the neuropeptide nature of an unusual low molecular weight peptide that is present within these CRH cells. We identified this peptide as the neuropeptide known as CRH(8-37), which is derived from the protein prepro-CRH that in turn is derived from the preprotachykinin A gene. CRH(8-37) was found to be very highly concentrated in the median eminence and periventricular nucleus. It was virtually absent in the hypothalamus proper. Prepro-CRH immunoreactive cells were also found in the median eminence and periventricular nucleus, but the highest levels were seen in the periventricular nucleus. These cells, however, did not exhibit the same pattern of CRH immunoreactivity as the CRH(8-37)-immunoreactive cells. The periventricular nucleus contained the most dense population of cells immunoreactive for prepro-CRH, but these cells did not show the same colocalization pattern for CRH(8-37) as were the CRH(8-37)-immunoreactive cells in the median eminence and periventricular nucleus.
