A coronavirus (CGV) was discovered in muscovy ducks with diarrhoea in their farms. Its morphology was similar to the coronavirus of turkey (TCV) and it displayed a very close antigenic relationship with turkey coronavirus (TCoV). Two mutations were found in its encoded replicase gene. A stop codon was found at position 47 and three amino acid mutations were identified at positions 564, 646 and 814. Three mutations were found in the 3'-non-translated region of the replicase gene at positions 989, 1041, and 1201. It was not possible to isolate the virus from spleen of experimentally infected ducks. Only a few transiently infected cells (up to 5% of cells) in the epithelium of the duodenum, jejunum, ileum, and the cecum were detected in ducklings at 2-4 days post-inoculation. Q: GIT - Commit multiple simultaneous files to single commit In my web app I have 3 or 4 html files which I want to commit all at once. I use GitWeb to view and push. When I do so, it saves only the last file. I am not sure how to make a commit that saves multiple files at once. A: You could create a separate commit for each html file $ git commit Or, if you want all of your HTML files included in the same commit, you can include all of them in the same commit, like this: $ git commit --all Some people even prefer using the -- all notation for simplicity. A: You can't do this in a single commit. You'll need to write a script that makes all the commits. A: In 3da54e8ca3
