is an international standard that sets the requirements for the quality management system (QMS) of the organization. In accordance with the requirements of ISO 9001:2008, the developer organization conducts a project for the implementation of the QMS and controls its work. The international standard was developed by the ISO organization, which is part of the International Association for the Certification of Quality Systems (ISO). Organizations that have implemented the international standard ISO 9001 can obtain ISO 9002 or ISO 14001 certification. (more...) The customs union, which includes Russia, Belarus and Kazakhstan, is a single customs space. And in general, this means that we are obliged to comply with a single customs and tariff regulation. In particular, its application extends to manufactured, imported and exported products. Compliance controls carried out within the Customs Union can cover even seemingly small products such as chips and other fast foods. However, the norms of the Customs Union concern not only food products. The same applies to the norms of European and international standards.

In the following article, we will talk about the main regulatory documents governing the requirements and certification procedures in the framework of the EU food safety policy, called Directives. (Further...) The creators of this blog are not employees of the State University of Management. The site uses cookies. By continuing to browse the site, you agree to the use of cookies.
