This invention relates to the continuous wave analysis of chemical vapor deposition processes and, more particularly, to a method for characterizing chemical vapor deposition growth of thin films, such as semiconductor films, and an arrangement for effecting the method. As device and material designs in VLSI and ULSI circuits are scaled down, the need for precise control of the structure and composition of the materials used becomes greater. Even more important is the need for precise control of the "quality" of the thin films produced. The term "quality" is used to denote electrical and structural characteristics of films which are determined by film composition, structure, and even surface orientation. It has been discovered that what may be termed "microscopic" growth characteristics of thin films can be determined by an analysis of the intensity pattern formed when exposing a substrate surface to a beam of light directed along one or more incident axes of the substrate. The intensity pattern is a function of the optical properties and physical location of the substrate surface. Accordingly, it is an object of this invention to provide a method for characterizing chemical vapor deposition growth of thin films. It is another object of this invention to provide an arrangement for characterizing chemical vapor deposition growth of thin films. Other objects and advantages of the invention will be apparent to those skilled in the art upon reference to the accompanying drawing and description.
