P.S. You can also visit the site: of varenicline treatment adherence and smoking cessation outcomes in smokers with depression. Depressed smokers have significantly less positive outcomes with varenicline than nondepressed smokers. We explored reasons for varenicline treatment adherence, its relationship to smoking cessation outcomes, and the relationship between depressed smokers' characteristics and their smoking cessation outcomes. Outpatients who had received varenicline (n = 180) completed self-report measures of depression (Patient Health Questionnaire-9), motivation to stop (Contemplation Ladder), degree of nicotine dependence (Fagerström Test for Cigarette Dependence), and smoking urges. About 21% of the depressed and depressed-anxious smokers completed the 4-month study. Compared to nondepressed and nondepressed-anxious smokers, depressed smokers had significantly less positive intentions to remain abstinent (P = b7e8fdf5c8
