Both of them are classified into two sections. Passive and active. Passive surveillance means either CCTV cameras or security cameras which is placed at the exit and entry of the areas are considered to be passive surveillance because it is not actively monitoring anything. In the other words it is watching without any interaction with the target. On the other hand active surveillance is used to actively watching the coming and going of the target by using any kind of active devices like motion detectors or night vision glasses and so on. Advantages of passive surveillance cameras are as follows: No maintenance No power supply Easy to install Disadvantages of passive surveillance cameras are as follows: Low resolution High cost Require good site for mounting Image quality is not perfect Reproduces surrounding light Light pollution Overheating of camera lens Require full sun light Require night light Pictures are easily captured Difficult for detecting objects Quality of picture is not of high level In general it is used to keep a control of the areas at the time of construction and maintenance. For example: A store owner uses passive surveillance camera for control purpose of incoming customers. A security guard uses passive surveillance camera to keep control of the exit and entering of the area. A surveillance camera for mining industry is mounted at the door of the underground rooms for the control purpose. A surveillance camera for a school or college uses to check the entering of the students at the school.
