Comments and

Discussions Well, thanks but I love my ASUS, so I don't need you to tell me what I already know :P.

What I'd like is to see an app that works on WP7 that also works on

Android for that matter.

And I'd prefer a native app, because it's an easy

workaround to get this on every android device... :) I can't believe this app has been out for more than three years and still has not been updated. I love the idea behind this app and think it is great for texting. I get so many messages on my phone, it is nice when they have something related to the

message. I have a lenovo ideapad with windows phone 7 pro and I just tried this app and it does not work correctly. As you can see in the video, it freezes at the introduction section and it does nothing after that. I have to close the app and re-open it (this has happened many times already) to keep it working for a while. It also does not take the phone's language into account. I speak portuguese and sometimes i get a mixture of english and portuguese when the moose says something And the worst part is, b7e8fdf5c8

Easylogging++ is a free easy to use and install software, which logs your system and application activity into log files. It works on Windows, Linux, and other Unix-like operating systems. It can record system information (CPU, disk, network usage, mouse pointer movement, etc), browser activity, emails (sending and receiving), instant messenger conversations, and more. All information is stored into text files and can be viewed with any text editor. These log files can be viewed by the user, forwarded to another user, or automatically compressed and moved into the specified directory. The log files can be saved in HTML format for more convenient data mining. However, this program does not mean that it cannot log other application activity, because it can record any activity, from registry to executing program. It can capture passwords and HTTP POST requests. This is a multi-platform software. On Windows, all records are stored into separate XML files. The application requires administrator's access to create and configure log files. On Linux and Unix-like systems, all data is stored into combined log files. This application is not spyware, adware, or a virus. It runs on demand, it does not require active Internet connection, and it does not display any intrusive dialog boxes

There is a wide variety of techniques and means for removing various types of target substances from body fluids. These include enzymatic techniques (such as the use of urease for urine analysis), immunological

techniques (such as the use of antibodies or antigens to remove or detect the target substance) and separation techniques (such as the use of membrane filtration). In many cases, two or more of these techniques are used concurrently for certain types of testing. For example, the presence of a target substance, such as chlordecone, may be detected with an immunological test, followed by a membrane filtration step to remove the antigen from the body fluid. Most of the separation techniques currently used are based on the use of particles that tend to settle at various rates depending on particle size, density and suspension media, such as to remove target substances from solution. According to this technique, the particles are mixed with the body fluid containing the target substance and separated from the target substance by settling them. Most of the particles sediment at relatively slow rates of about 10 to 20 cm/min. The main problem with this type of separation technique is that the target substance tends to settle at the bottom of the settling chamber before it is completely separated from the suspension media. Some investigators have reported using a thickening agent (such as bentonite clay) to increase the rate of sedimentation. This technique is not entirely satisfactory, however, because the use of a thickening agent tends to interfere with the other techniques described herein, which are meant to be used separately or in conjunction with the determination of the presence of a target substance. A second major problem with the current separation techniques is the cost. Most currently available separation techniques involve relatively sophisticated and expensive equipment.

Many of the standard laboratory separation techniques used in hospitals and clinics are manually operated, and are relatively expensive. It is an object of the present invention to provide a simple method for separating target substances from body fluids that does not require expensive or sophisticated equipment.

---

It is another object of the invention to provide a
