 We're here for you," she said, "to help you with money, housing, whatever you need. But please, please, don't abuse our help," she warned. The following day, I called the number listed on the billing statement and, after much confusion, I spoke to a member of the family, whom I'll call Ruben, who directed me to an organizer for the Mexico Solidarity Network, the local branch of the Socialist Party in Tijuana. They gave me the address of the home, told me to knock on the door, and sure enough, Ondine answered. She's 20 now and makes $4 an hour working as a cook. "Not even for working with us," Ruben said, "your health coverage is provided by us, the union. Your salaries are supplemented by the families who have worked in the factory, so you're not the only ones getting help." Ondine's wages are supplemented by the families who have worked at the factory, so you're not the only one getting help. Unfortunately d0c515b9f4

Mayor Gavin Newsom's press release today announcing a new Bay Area report card system in which the rest of California uses a 50 point scale for examining the public school system was predictably disingenuous. It was too easy for the mayor to not highlight the 28 points in the report that show that California is actually a fantastic school system. Newsom was afraid to show the truth about California because it might result in the city losing its comparative advantage in education. The mayor is only interested in helping his city, not the state of California, and it is obvious that he doesn't care if he is only bribing cities to do the right thing if it makes him look good. Over the last five years, Newsom has been publicly supportive of charter schools, but has worked privately to undermine them. He's repeatedly sued parents for enrolling their children in school charter, but refuses to require charter schools to have their own charters and keep their doors open. He has a hidden agenda that doesn't align with the public good. Newsom's press release does highlight the five criteria that are measured for a school and also the one criterion that is not measured. This is what he says: SAN FRANCISCO - Today Mayor Gavin Newsom announced the release of "Getting To the Best," a review of San Francisco public schools by Outcomes Research Consortium, the same nationally acclaimed research organization that took on California's schools in its 2008 report "Cal State Report Card." "Getting To the Best" provides a way for the rest of California to track its progress on our scorecard and consider what our schools should look like," said Mayor Newsom. "It's time for our students to realize the full
