Is there a way to retrieve it into an array? Like this: List locations = getLocationList(); I tried to do this but it's not working: public List getLocationList() { List locations = new List(); Location location = (Location) this.transform.gameObject.AddComponent(); location.SetPosition (Vector3.zero); location.Region = Region.World; location.Update(3, false); locations.Add(location.GetPosition()); return locations; } After getting the list of locations, I want to retrieve them into an array. Is this possible? A: No, you can't directly access the internal List in the return value of the GetLocationList method. That's not the way Unity does things. This method returns a Location instance, and you can add components to that Location instance just fine. It looks like you want to use the List of Locations in a prefab, and have a collection of these prefabs in your scene. To do this, first assign the prefab to your scene (also make sure the prefab is a child of the root object in your scene). You can then access the component in the prefab using GameObject.GetComponent(). To remove a component from the prefab, call Object.DestroyImmediate(prefab.gameObject). I have received many emails of comments, but not much time to read them. However my reply is quick to come. I have read only your first post. I have gone back to look at all the "arguments". These are the following: 1. All the heat sinking stuff is just a fluff to up the heat dissipation rate. It is not a necessity. In fact, it is a negative factor. If your laptop contains fans all the
