GABA regulates aldosterone and mineralocorticoid production in the zona glomerulosa of the rat adrenal. Gabaergic innervation of the zona glomerulosa (ZG) and its relevance to mineralocorticoid production have not been fully evaluated. The present study evaluated the influence of activation of the GABA-benzodiazepine receptor-ionophore complex on aldosterone production in the ZG of rat adrenal glands. Pharmacologic activation of the GABA-benzodiazepine receptor-ionophore complex with zolpidem (ZP), a selective benzodiazepine receptor agonist, increased cortical aldosterone production in rats with adrenalectomized (ADX) zona glomerulosa, while treatment with the selective GABA(A) receptor antagonist, bicuculline (BIC), suppressed aldosterone production in both intact and ADX zona glomerulosa. The induction of zona glomerulosa-derived aldosterone production was accompanied by increased enzyme activity of 11beta-hydroxysteroid dehydrogenase (11beta-HSD). The pharmacologic induction of 11beta-HSD-2 activity was accompanied by activation of 11beta-hydroxysteroid dehydrogenase-1 (11beta-HSD-1) activity. The data suggest that GABAergic innervation of the zona glomerulosa serves to limit the activity of the enzyme 11beta-HSD-2, thereby regulating the production of aldosterone. Furthermore, this study reveals that GABA regulates the production of aldosterone by a non-corticosteroid related mechanism.k(t). t**3 - t Let x(p) = p**2 - p. Let r(h) = -
