Most people have no idea what the most common genetic ailments are. What most people know about genetics is merely the concept that when you have two parents, two grandparents, you have four of each of your genes. And, if you're like most people, you probably assume that all four of those genes can be determined by just looking at your parents, especially if you have siblings. In this video tutorial, we will teach you how to determine your genetic makeup using a simple test and gel that we have at home. You will also learn to test your children for the most common genetic ailments that affect your pet. These tests will help you determine if you have a genetic mutation that predisposes you to developing these ailments, and if that is the case, how likely it is for you to pass those illnesses onto your offspring. This test will be more cost effective and will be more accurate than guessing and trying to figure it out. The most common genetic traits found in American pets Red Eye Blood Coagulation Factor V Leiden Black Eye/Orange Eye Cancer Pale Skin Blue Eye Head and Neck Cancer Cyst/Cysts (Urinary) Chondrodysplasia Cushing Disease Ears Seizures Hair Slight Bone Changes/Back/Neck/Arm Pain Heart Disease Heavy Lungs Lung/Heart Disease Jaundice Neurological Disease Muscular Dystrophy Enlarged Liver Appendicitis Low Milk Production Nasal Disease Food Intake/Excessive Drinking [CREDITS] VIDEO [CLEAR] [RESUMES] [PSYCHIC A.M.] [END] For more helpful resources, please click here. *Disclaimer: Please note that the above list is not exhaustive. It is meant as a resource for your understanding of and education regarding your pet. Please refer to your veterinarian for further testing, especially if you have any health concerns. Suggestions and Tips: We highly recommend lab-testing your pet for these conditions when purchasing your pet or when adopting a pet. It is important to keep in mind that the test is not 100% accurate and can only give you a better

Nervous system In a nervous system, the term nervous means of, or pertaining to nerves or to nerve fibers. It is also known as neurosomatic, or the sensorimotor nervous system. It is involved with the transmission of neuronal signals from the body through the central nervous system to the brain. Neurosomatic may also refer to the treatment of nervous or sensory system disorders. The nervous system is composed of the brain and spinal cord; peripheral nervous system, which functions outside the central nervous system; and autonomic nervous system. While brains and spinal cords are often considered to be a form of nervous system, it is important to differentiate them from the brain and spinal cord. The nervous system receives information from both internal and external stimuli. Some of the information received is related to the internal working of the body, such as the intake of food, blood pressure, and the capacity of the heart. Other information is related to the external world, such as the intensity and rate of changes in the speed of the car. This can be a complex process because the different types of information are received and combined; this is called information processing. The nervous system is responsible for this process. Structure The nervous system is composed of the central nervous system and peripheral nervous system. Central nervous system is composed of the brain and spinal cord. It is responsible for the processing of information from the body. The nervous system carries information from all internal and external organs back to the brain and then to higher processing centers. The peripheral nervous system processes information related to the internal working of the body. It sends signals from the central nervous system to the muscles, glands, and other parts of the body. The vagus nerve is a 12-inch nerve that includes both motor and sensory nerves and is responsible for feelings of hunger, thirst, and emotions in the body. The vagus nerve is also responsible for many functions in the body such as heart rate regulation, digestion, immune system function, and breathing. The sensory and motor nerve fibers that link the central nervous system to the body traverse the spinal cord. The spinal cord is a region of the central nervous system that is enclosed in a bony structure called the spinal column. The spinal column connects the brain to the body and is composed of vertebrae and intervertebral disks. It is important to differentiate between the brain and central nervous system, and the spinal cord. The central nervous system is responsible
