Quality of life in hematologic cancer patients receiving erythropoietin: the influence of nutrition and physical activities. The aim of this study was to investigate the relationship between energy- and protein-intake, physical activity and nutrition, and quality of life in hematologic cancer patients receiving erythropoietin. 57 patients (16 men and 41 women) aged 20-74 years, with advanced hematologic cancer, were enrolled into the study. The patients' energy and protein intake was analyzed three times during the study period. The influence of the above mentioned factors on quality of life was investigated by using a questionnaire. Data for energy- and protein-intake, physical activity and quality of life were recorded for a period of 4 weeks. Pearson's correlation coefficient and MANOVA were applied for statistical analysis. The energy- and protein-intake in patients suffering from solid tumor diseases were similar to the controls. However, the energy-intake of patients with hematologic diseases was significantly lower (P
