The mission of the Microfluidics Course is to provide all trainees with a solid, comprehensive foundation of theory and applications of microfluidics to basic science, research and diagnostic technologies. In the past five years, the course has trained hundreds of participants from the Boston area, including students, researchers, and faculty from Harvard Medical School, Harvard University, Boston College, Boston University, and Northeastern University. The Course includes a wide variety of topics that demonstrate how microfluidics is used in biology, engineering, and medicine and advances methodologies in a wide array of research fields. In the next grant period we propose to offer six half-day seminars and 6d1f23a050
